Jim Morgan, 60
Living with Parkinson’s disease alongside the support of his wife, Missy. Parkinson’s Foundation South Florida Chapter Committee Member, Moving Day Miami Team Captain

“The Parkinson’s Foundation has changed my life. By introducing me to the power of exercise, through a Foundation-funded exercise class, I am healthier today than when I was diagnosed with Parkinson’s more than 11 years ago. The Foundation’s information and resources have helped me understand the issues I am facing and how I can live a healthier and more productive life. More importantly, the Foundation has introduced me to a community of incredible people that care for and support each other as we progress with the disease.”
MESSAGE FROM THE CEO

I am pleased to present the first annual report for the Parkinson’s Foundation representing our 2017 achievements. In 2016, two legacy organizations, the National Parkinson Foundation (NPF) and the Parkinson’s Disease Foundation (PDF), merged to form the Parkinson’s Foundation. This report reflects the seminal milestones of our 60-year combined history as an organization.

For the one million Americans currently struggling with Parkinson’s, it is imperative that we make progress today. The Parkinson’s Foundation is the leader in understanding Parkinson’s through research; ensuring better medical care; and educating and empowering the Parkinson’s community. These guiding pillars of our work will allow us to take a chronic, degenerative disease and give people hope of independence and quality of life.

Within these pages, you will learn how we are helping people like Jim Morgan (adjacent page) who has been living with Parkinson’s for more than a decade. He is not letting Parkinson’s slow him down and he is a strong voice within the Parkinson’s community.

With the support of researchers, health care professionals, volunteers and donors around the world, we can create better lives for people like Jim; but we can only do this together.

In 2018, we transition to new board leadership at the Parkinson’s Foundation. John W. Kozyak, Esq. has served as Chairman of the Parkinson’s Foundation Board of Directors and will be retiring from this post. We thank John for his decade of service on behalf of the Parkinson’s community and his tremendous efforts to bring NPF and PDF together. We warmly welcome Howard Morgan as the incoming Chairman.

In the year ahead, we have many promising research initiatives and 60,000 more Americans who will be newly diagnosed to support. We could not do this without your commitment to the cause. Thank you for believing in our mission to make life better for people with Parkinson’s and their families.

Thank you,

John L. Lehr
President and Chief Executive Officer
Parkinson’s Foundation

ABOUT THE PARKINSON’S FOUNDATION
The Parkinson’s Foundation makes life better for people with Parkinson’s disease by improving care and advancing research toward a cure. In everything we do, we build on the energy, experience and passion of our global Parkinson’s community.
Since 1957, the Foundation has invested more than $330 million in Parkinson’s research and clinical care. After 60 years of working to defeat Parkinson’s, we reflect on Foundation investments that have revolutionized the field.

In 1967, Dr. Melvin Yahr, a leader of the Parkinson’s Foundation, and Dr. Margaret Hoehn, a Foundation postdoctoral fellow, developed the first standard tool to measure Parkinson’s progression at Columbia University, now a Parkinson’s Foundation Center of Excellence.

Two years later, Dr. Yahr published the first blind clinical trial of levodopa, proving that the medication could relieve Parkinson’s symptoms.

In the 1980s, Dr. Stanley Fahn, longtime member on the Foundation’s Board of Directors, and Dr. Harold Klawans at Rush University, a Center of Excellence, established what is now the largest movement disorders training program in the world. Several years later, Dr. Fahn and colleagues developed the Unified Parkinson’s Disease Rating Scale – still used in clinical trials.

In 1997, Foundation postdoctoral fellow, Dr. Roger Duvoisin discovered the first Parkinson’s-associated gene called alpha-synuclein. In 2008, Rush University researchers, along with a team in Sweden, found the first evidence that Parkinson’s spreads from cell to cell.

These discoveries have proven critical to new treatments under development.

Today, we work toward the next breakthrough. Just three years ago, we initiated the Community Choice Research Awards, funding top research priorities as identified by the Parkinson’s community. The Foundation also continues the largest clinical study of Parkinson’s disease in the world, the Parkinson’s Outcomes Project, which tracks more than 10,000 people with Parkinson’s and caregivers since 2009 to better comprehend Parkinson’s.

“I was at a critical point in my novel deep brain stimulation study when I received a grant from the Parkinson’s Foundation. The grant allowed me to continue my work and further explore this Parkinson’s disease treatment. It is really encouraging to have my work supported by the Parkinson’s Foundation, especially as a post doctorate.”

— Jing Wang, PhD
Parkinson’s Foundation Postdoctoral Fellow
Research Associate, University of Minnesota
Together, the Parkinson’s Foundation collaborates with the brightest minds in Parkinson’s research through grants and awards. The Foundation has supported more than 400 scientists who work to better understand Parkinson’s.
Together, the Parkinson’s Foundation works with health care professionals. We created the first clinical team training program, called Allied Team Training for Parkinson’s, which has trained more than 2,000 health care professionals in North America.

Only 10 percent of the one million Americans diagnosed with Parkinson’s in the U.S. receive the highest standard of care. The Parkinson’s Foundation is accelerating its efforts to address this inequity so people with Parkinson’s get the care they need, wherever they live.

Our vision to provide the highest standard of care to more people with Parkinson’s advanced in 1990 when the Foundation established the “center of excellence” model. To date, we have designated 42 premier treatment and research centers worldwide as Centers of Excellence where health professionals who specialize in Parkinson’s work together to set the highest standards of care. It is the largest network of Parkinson’s clinics in the world, currently treating more than 119,000 people with Parkinson’s.

The Foundation was the first to champion the comprehensive care team model, now standard at clinics across the country. In 1998, the Foundation launched its toll-free Helpline to provide care, support and referrals to people with Parkinson’s and their families in English and Spanish.

The next generation of healthcare professionals must have the knowledge and skills to provide comprehensive care to people with Parkinson’s, which is why the Foundation has always been at the forefront of training healthcare professionals through programs like Allied Team Training for Parkinson’s.

In addition to providing free webinars and training courses, the Foundation has trained more than 235 nurse faculty and 30 physical therapy faculty, who go on to teach thousands of students each year. We offer the only Parkinson’s-tailored faculty training programs to prepare nurses and physical therapists to better educate students on how to care for people with Parkinson’s.

“The training will change my group practice and how we interact as a team. More efficient teams mean better care. Allied Team Training for Parkinson’s training has created the vehicle to drive us as a team in the achievement of our goal for exceptional care.”

Empowering the Parkinson’s Community

“My involvement within the Parkinson’s community took off exponentially as a result of the Parkinson’s Advocates in Research Learning Institute. It opened numerous doors and introduced me to people with Parkinson’s, care partners and scientists that I now consider lifelong friends.”

— Linda Morgan, RPh, MBA
Parkinson’s Foundation Research Advocate
Living with Parkinson’s disease

The Parkinson’s Foundation believes in empowering every person with Parkinson’s to be their own advocate. This drives us to continue providing better and more accessible resources — from Parkinson.org and free educational books to videos and podcasts — while strengthening and furthering the reach of our community-based programs.

In 2006, the Foundation became the first organization to establish a patient leadership group, the People with Parkinson’s Advisory Council, to ensure that the perspective of people living with Parkinson’s and care partners is included in all programs.

To empower and protect people with Parkinson’s when at their most vulnerable — during planned and unplanned hospital visits — the Foundation developed the life-saving Aware in Care kit in 2011. More than 75,000 kits have been distributed to people with Parkinson’s, ensuring they get the best possible care when hospitalized.

The Parkinson’s Foundation continues to localize programs, resources and awareness, which is why in 2011, the Foundation created what is now the largest grassroots Parkinson’s awareness event — Moving Day, A Walk for Parkinson’s, which promotes exercise and wellness.

Better Lives.

In 2015, seeking to help an underserved population within our own community, the Foundation established the first program to address gender disparities in Parkinson’s care and research — the Women and PD Initiative.
Together, in an effort to speed research, our Parkinson’s Advocates in Research program educates people with Parkinson’s and caregivers about research and pairs them as partners with scientists, industry and government.

“When you have Parkinson’s, you have the choice to get involved and try to make a difference or let others do the work,” Scott Rider, 57, Moving Day Columbus participant said. “About three years ago, I realized I wanted to make a difference. For me, the best way to do that was to help the Parkinson’s Foundation through Moving Day.”

Moving Day is more than just a walk. In 2018, Moving Day will bring hope to a record-breaking 39 cities across the country by highlighting movement and exercise for people with Parkinson’s, caregivers and family members.

“Every year I support Moving Day because of all the research and resources the Parkinson’s Foundation provides,” Scott said. “It’s a great feeling and very powerful to have so many people who care about you supporting the cause.”

Moving Day furthers the Parkinson’s Foundation mission to make lives better for people with Parkinson’s. Funds raised support research programs, expand expert care to more people and provide free resources to the Parkinson’s community.

Community Grant Funds
Local Dance Class

A 2017 Parkinson’s Foundation community grant helped establish a weekly Dance for PD class in Stanford, CA. “As physicians, we stress the importance of physical activity, social interaction and mental stimulation to our patients with Parkinson’s,” said Helen Bronte-Stewart, MD, director of the Stanford Movement Disorders Center, grant recipient.
Caregiver Turns to Advocacy for Empowerment

Trial and error led Leslie and her husband, Steve, who is living with Parkinson’s, to a support group that works for them. Today, Leslie not only leads the support group, works full-time and helps Steve, she is a Parkinson’s advocate in her home state of Colorado. She also helps guide Foundation programs and resources as a member of the Parkinson’s Foundation People with Parkinson’s Advisory Council.
The Parkinson’s Foundation recognizes and honors all Legacy Society members who support the Foundation in their wills, trusts, life income gifts, retirement plans and other planned gifts. Legacy Society members leave meaningful, lasting legacies for future generations.

The Parkinson’s Foundation gratefully acknowledges those corporations who actively support our mission critical programs and research initiatives.
